EXAMPLE OF LEGAL PAPERS

BEFORE BUYING A NUMBERPLATE

One of the most important requirements is to establish whether the numberplate supplier has their own valid SABS permit or whether they are operating under a permit belonging to another supplier or business. Each SABS permit must be properly registered in the name of the numberplate supplier or company and must correspond to the specific premises where the business is operating. The numberplate supplier must also be able to produce the valid SABS permit upon request for verification purposes. It is important to confirm that the permit is current, valid, and has not expired, and that all the details on the permit correspond with the numberplate supplier, company name, and physical premises being inspected. Therefore, when assessing compliance, it is essential to verify the SABS permit number, registered numberplate supplier/company name, registered premises or branch address, and expiry or validity date. If the numberplate supplier cannot produce a valid permit, or if the permit belongs to another supplier, another branch, or a different premises, this should be regarded as a serious compliance concern and investigated further.

France was the nation that acquainted the world with number plates. The first-ever number plate was launched in 1893. When cars were invented, it became quite a handful to remember the order. So it was France who decided to rescue the world from getting confused
